

Ancient Journey Up the River: From Cahokia to Trempealeau

Trempealeau

Mississippian Mounds

Mississippi River

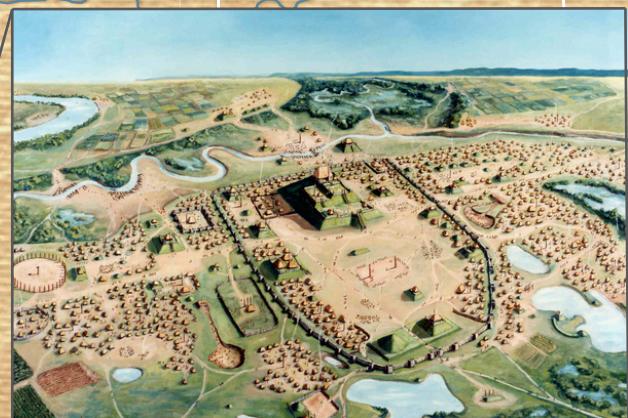

Ancient Dugout Canoe

Around 1050 AD, a group of people from a culture known as the Mississippians traveled up river from Cahokia to Trempealeau. The number of river miles between the two points is roughly 900 miles. A thousand years ago, it was a great feat to travel that far, upriver, by canoe. The journey was extremely difficult and probably took months. We still don't know what the reasons for making this difficult journey were.

Some of the theories are:

- Religious Quest
- Political Separation
- Hunt for Resources

Artist's Rendition of Ancient Cahokia

Cahokia

0

50

100 Miles

Made By: Courtney Schmidt

Sources:

- Natural Earth Data
- <http://www.ancientorigins.net/news/history-archaeology-ancient-places/ten-amazing-cities-ancient-world-002094>

Projection Information:

Central Meridian: -90.45°

Standard Parallel 1: 40.50°

Standard Parallel 2: 44.00°

Scale: 1:5,000,000